“The many Faces of the Nuclear World”

A talk by Jean-Claude Guais

At the restaurant

“L’Envol”, Angers-Loire Airport,

Jean-Claude Guais' career covered many aspects of the nuclear industry, hence the title of his talk:

" The Many Faces of the Nuclear World "

After graduating in mathematics and physics, Jean-Claude Guais embarked on his career working for the French Atomic Energy Commission (CEA). His work involved theoretical research on elementary particles and research and development on isotopic separation. He worked on the design, construction and operation of a large uranium enrichment facility (EURODIF), before turning his attention to the marketing and international sales of nuclear products and services for nuclear electricity production. This was followed by several years in General Management and Strategy in the US branch of AREVA at Washington. During the latter days of his career, he worked as an international consultant with many governments and industries, advising on the political aspects of the nuclear industry and the role of nuclear electricity on the environment, particularly in relation to greenhouse effect and climate change and non-proliferation, both aspects at the heart of the international development of nuclear power.

Non-proliferation means the protection against misuse of nuclear products for atomic bombs, either by rogue states or terrorist organisations. Listen, learn and take this opportunity to discuss with an expert this important subject that affects all our lives.

Jean-Claude has asked for time to be set aside for questions as he is sure that his talk will raise many issues about different aspects of the nuclear industry.
